Litwin, Rory, ed. Library Juice Concentrate. Duluth: Library Juice Press, 2006.

Library Juice Concentrate is far more than a compendium of essays and writings published between 1998 and 2005 by Litwin and other progressive librarians on Library Juice – a web-based serial that has since morphed into a noteworthy Blog. As the title might suggest, the collection of work is organized and concentrated into a blend of structured themes: Foundation Building, Professional Issues, Intellectual Freedom and Media Independence, Librarians' Culture and Identity, a section on Cuba (included as a historical amalgam and mode for understanding the current friction within the Library Left surrounding the "Cuba Independent Library Movement"), and miscellany (humorous, poignant library-related limericks philosophically relevant quotations, and suggested paper topics). Though the bulk of this tome is comprised of Litwin's studious and insightful critique of stolid and traditionally safe tenets of our profession, other voices add flavor to this concoction and proffer a body of critical thinking on issues that have been hotly bandied about (calmly debated on occasion) in the meeting halls of ALA confer-252.48cm BT 46 0 0 460 0 46 1190
